Paper 1

Coming to New England in the early 1600s, there were many expectations that I had regarding my personal success as well as the success of the colony. Some of these expectations were met, while others evolved into different outlook. Through my vast experiences in this new-found land I have managed to not only earn a livelihood but also effectively contribute in the spread of my religion. In Europe the virality of religion is lost. It is for this reason that I have ventured so far for not only the spread of our religion but also to thrive on new and pure land. I believe that moving to New England from Europe would be not only Financial but also spirituality.

Life in New England is primarily centered around the church and its specific sets of rules. These replaced any governance that would be necessary in this area.() One of the finer points of abiding by these rules, is that one must adhere to strict religious value. In the event that one would break any of these rules, then it would unfortunately result in expulsion for the area or execution. The economy New England area was driven by Lumber trade. This trade contributed to the financial stability of the overall colony.() I however as are most individual in this area, am financially self-sustaining. I farm food crops, do fishing and trade them for living as well as eat them for survival.

Most of the people who live in New England were in the Middle class in Europe and had skills like farmers.() It was easier for these people to survive in New England as there skills were easily transferred form Europe. The climate also helped in making the transition form Europe to New England as the climatic structure of New England is very similar to Europe. This also mean that people who wanted to grow cash crops like tobacco and sugar could not move to New England, which made this place less competitive and easier to survive.()

As making money was not the primary motive to move to New England people who moved here was mostly skilled families. Religion is core element of society in New England, so most of the people living in new England were literate as well as they had a heathy life span compared to there colonist in American.() The demographic is fairly even as mostly men moved to New England with their family. In the early 1620s only, the separatist moved to New England but soon the puritan soon follow then staring in the 1630s. The great migration happened around 1640s when thousands of puritans moved to New England. After then very less people came here. The living condition were very go in New England, The first generation of colonists lived to an average age to 70, nearly twice as Virginia and 10 years longer than people in Europe.() The living condition was so good that almost all the population growth during the late 17th century was by natural reproduction. The overall demographic of the region can be constituted as evenly distributed across the region. This in turn plays into the overall attraction to prospective families migrating to the New England form Europe.
